Hearts in Atlantis (1999) is a collection of two short stories and three short stories by Stephen King, all linked to each other by recurring characters and others revealing in roughly chronological order. The stories tell of the baby boomer generation, especially King's view that this generation (to which he belongs) has not lived up to his promise and ideals. Significantly, the collection's opening epigraph is the Peter Fonda line from the end of Easy Rider: We blew it. All stories tell of the 1960s and the war in Vietnam and in all members of this generation fall deeply, or pay the costs of a profound failure on their part. Stories Low Men in Yellow Coats is the first and longest work of the book, the year is 1960. A young boy named Bobby Garfield lives in Harwich, Connecticut, with his mother, Liz, a widow. He befriends a man named Ted Brautigan, who possesses psychic abilities. He confesses to Bobby that he is being hunted down by low men who wear yellow coats and drive garish cars. Although Bobby agrees to let Ted know when he begins to see lost animal signs that indicate that low men are close, Bobby says nothing when he ends up seeing them for fear of losing his friend. One day, Bobby finds that his friend Carol was beaten by three bullies with a baseball bat and left in a grove of trees. He takes her to his apartment, where Ted has to take off his shirt in order to put on his dislocated shoulder. Liz returns home (herself after being violently raped at a real estate seminar) and assumes that Ted has been molesting Carol. They solve the misunderstanding, and Liz takes Carol home. Suspecting that his mother told the men down from where Ted is, Bobby catches up with Ted just as they are about to take him away. Bobby has the choice to go with Ted, unknown destination. He decides to stay, but despises himself for his decision. After leaving Harwich with his mother and being placed twice in a juvenile detention centre, Bobby receives a Ted envelope filled with red rose petals. He knows that Ted is once again low men. Hearts in Atlantis The next part of the book, Hearts in Atlantis, takes place in 1966. Peter Riley, a fresh fresh graduate student at the University of Maine, becomes addicted to playing hearts in the all-male dorm where he lives. Although their student the postponements protected them from serving in the Vietnam War, Peter and the growing number of students addicted to gambling (led by student Ronnie Malenfant, who introduced the game into the dorm) put themselves at risk that their studies suffer. Peter eventually meets Bobby Garfield's childhood friend Carol. Carol herself uses student activism as an escaped addiction of her own. Although they fall in love, Carol comes to announce that she will be leaving school. She explains that her decisions are forever influenced by Bobby's help. She and Peter are having sex for the first time in her car. The next morning, she left a note warning her to stop playing hearts. When Stokely Jones, a disabled student activist (who specifically asks for a dorm room on the third floor, despite being on crutches), slips and falls into a rainstorm, Peter is disturbed by the strange way he and the other boys mocked Stokely's misfortune. He finds that he is shaken by his hearts addiction and resolves to turn his notes around. Shortly after, Stokely is accused of spraying FUCK JOHNSON on a campus wall, with the dorm floor proctor reasoning that the peace signs accompanying the message lead to Stokely. However, Peter and the others point out that they too were toing signs of peace, undermining the accusation and saving Stokely from punishment. Peter barely passes her classes and receives a packet of Carol containing a newspaper article of a protest in which she participated. Blind Willie This short story was originally published in the October 1994 issue of Antaeus, and in 1997 was published as part of King's limited edition collection of six stories. For its inclusion in Hearts in Atlantis, the story was heavily revised. Willie Shearman is a Vietnam veteran who lives in Connecticut but is in a particular sidewalk location in downtown New York city every day. He appears to have a somatiform disorder, becoming blind every afternoon at the time of day when he was caught in a shooting and temporarily blinded. He believes that his blindness is a form of penance for his involvement in carol's childhood beating of Carol (of Low Men in Yellow Coats) and continually writes him an apology in notebooks he carries. Willie also keeps an album about him; his involvement in activist groups has become increasingly militant under the direction of a Svengali leader named Raymond Fiegler (a name with the initials R.F., suggesting that he is Randall Flagg). The group became responsible for a bomb attack at a recruitment office, giving Carol the name Red Carol (although she may have tried to stop the bomb). Carol was reportedly killed when their headquarters were attacked and the building set it on fire. At the end of the day, Willie's sight returns, which means it's time to go home to his suburban lifestyle. The story ends when he draws inspiration from how to deal with the police officer he bribes so as not to be arrested. Stop. We Are in Vietnam Two veterans, John Sullivan (another childhood friend of Bobby Garfield) and a man named Dieffenbaker meet at the funeral of a third. They revisit an incident that almost degenerated into a My Lai-type massacre: stressed by the effort to rescue survivors of a helicopter crash, Ronnie Malenfant (who first appears as another Hearts in Hearts in Atlantis player) commits to burning a village in Dong Ha as a message to the enemy. After Malenfant stabbed a woman with his bayonet and things spiral out of control, Dieffenbaker has a soldier shoot another rampaging soldier to stop the impending massacre. Later, Sullivan was seriously injured. When he is airlifted out of action, he sees the elderly woman who had been stabbed (mamasan) sitting in the helicopter with him, a hallucination that continued for life. A recurring theme of the conversation between Sullivan and Dieffenbaker is the growing feeling between the two men that the different characters of their youth sold in various ways to the lure of materialism and conformity. While the funeral returns, Sullivan is caught in a traffic jam. Clearly mind-blowing, he begins to see things fall from the sky: wireless phones, a grand piano, appliances and a long yellow coat like the wear of low men. He is hit by another object, and picks it up to discover that it is Bobby Garfield's Alvin Dark glove. Mamasan, bearing, speaks for the first time, saying she will keep him safe. He suddenly finds himself in his car. All the objects that fell from the sky are gone, except the glove, which Sullivan carries on his hand. Sullivan becomes very tired, closes his eyes, and dies of an apparent heart attack. Heavenly Shades of Night Are Falling Bobby Garfield returns to Harwich to attend the funeral of John Sullivan, who died in his car stuck in a traffic jam shortly after hallucinating household objects (symbols of the growing materialism of baby boomers) falling from the sky in the previous chapter. Bobby also visits the park where he once bumped into Carol Gerber with his injured arm after being beaten by local boys. In the park, he finds his old friend Carol, alive but scared and burned. She says she now goes under the name Denise Schoonover. Bobby reveals that he came because Sullivan's probate lawyer sent him his old dark fielder alvin mitt with his current address in Ted's writing. He then produced what was in the glove: the copyright page of Lord of the Flies, showing that although it came from the 1960 edition, it is still brand new. On it is written a message for Carol de Ted (Tell her she was as brave as a lion) and which she had written for Peter Riley on her copy (Hear) - (Sign of Peace) - INFORMATION) in Hearts in Atlantis. Reception Charles de Lint praised Hearts in Atlantis as the great American baby-boomer novel, saying that, when it is at the top of its game, as it is certainly here, it [King] can be as provocative and and 'l[insert your favorite literary] author here like. The film adaptation Low Men in Yellow Coats and Heavenly Shades of Night Are Falling formed the basis of a 2001 film hearts in Atlantis, starring Anthony Hopkins as Ted Brautigan, Anton Yelchin as Bobby Garfield, Mika Boorem as Carol Gerber and Hope Davis as Liz Garfield. The main elements of the story are common to the film and the story, but many details have been changed. In addition, all references to the Black Tower have been removed and the finite fates of the characters, revealed in the last stories of the original novel, are excluded. Another consequence of these changes is that the title of the film is completely impenetrable to those who do not know the novel, although a snippet of dialogue tries to remedy it: Ted notices that childhood is a lost city like Atlantis. Connection to King's other works The city of Derry is mentioned several times to be near the University of Maine. Derry is a recurring setting for King's novels and short stories. Regulators are mentioned, and appear in several stories related to the universe of the Black Tower. When Ted has become empty, he uses a language that often occurs in the universe of the Black Tower, as when he says There will be water God willing and All things serve the Beam. When Ted sends a letter to Bobby towards the end of the novel, the envelope is filled with red rose petals; the Black Tower stands in a field of red roses called Ca-Ka No Rey. As for the overall plot of the series The Dark Tower, it is revealed in the seventh book that Ted is essential to the quest of the purple king to break the beams that hold the Black Tower, which in turn keeps the universe together. Low men also appear in King's short story, published for Amazon's Kindle in 2009. One of the tyrants who defeated Carol, Harry Doolin, shares a surname with minor characters in Wolves of the Calla, Molly and Eamon Doolin. Raymond Fiegler, who is identified towards the end of the novel as the leader of an activist group when he prevents Carol Gerber from recovering an unexploded bomb on a university campus, is most likely another alias of Randall Flagg, a recurring villain in many of King's works. King never identifies Fiegler as Flagg, but Christopher Golden and Hank Wagner suggest in The Complete Stephen King Universe that there is little doubt that Fiegler is Flagg. Golden and Wagner cite evidence such as Fiegler's ability to appear weak (an ability shared by Flagg in Eyes of the Dragon), his manipulation of Carol Gerber and her activist friends, and the frequent use of alias Flagg (usually with the initials R.F.).
